IN MEMORIAM...

PROFESSOR JOHN A. ARTHUR
(MARCH 1958 - MARCH 2016)

John Arthur was born in Accra, Ghana, and came to the United States in 1992. He began teaching at UMD in 1993. He was the founding director of the African and African American Studies Program, and he served in several administrative positions, including as faculty fellow for strategic planning, chairman of his department and director of the Study in England Program.

John was a hugely accomplished colleague: at the top of his game as a scholar, a beloved teacher, a friend and cherished colleague to many, and a leader for diversity and social justice on this campus and in the Duluth community. He will be deeply, deeply missed, though what he has accomplished
The department had a successful Women's History Month 2016, featuring WGSS faculty presentations, Margaret Randall, feminist poet, writer, photographer, and social activist and Keynote Speaker Winona LaDuke, activist, author, economist, and mother.

Faculty Showcase featured WGSS collective project "Making Waves: A History of Grassroots Feminist Organizations in the Northland: 1975-2015", written by Beth Bartlett, and was presented to the public in March.

Professor Beth Bartlett was named UMD's Community Engaged Scholar Award Campus recipient.

Jane Maddy Book Award

Jane Maddy was one of the founding members of Women's Studies at UMD. She taught Psychology courses that were part of the Women's Studies curriculum, and served on the Women's Studies Advisory Board for many years. She was dedicated to Women's Studies, and feminist scholarship and causes, so we are excited to offer scholarships to Women, Gender & Sexuality Studies majors in her honor.

Award Recipient: Amanda Szczech

Amanda is a triple major in WGSS, International Studies and Psychology. She is passionate about environmental justice and its intersection with Women's Studies.

Award Recipient: Hannah Schleeder

Hannah is a junior Women's Studies and Political Science major. In Political Science, she finds comparative politics and gender relations to be deeply interesting areas of study, and wishes to focus on them in her upcoming independent study. Hannah is working towards being accepted to a Feminist Studies Master's and PhD program.

DANIEL & MARY LEVENDUSKI HUMANITIES SCHOLARSHIP

Daniel and Mary Levenduski, natives of the Twin Ports, were children during the Depression. Both came from large families, and both entered the workplace while still completing their high school educations. For neither of them was a college degree financially possible. Yet both of them embraced the value of a post-secondary education and believed that a broad grounding in the liberal arts was important for future success in all fields. They were grateful to UMD for providing this grounding for their daughter and when, in 1988, they sold the highly successful commercial printing business they started in 1950 in Duluth, they began to give back to UMD and to provide support for the humanities, their daughter’s chosen field of study. This scholarship honors them and perpetuates their commitment to the study of the humanities across disciplines at UMD.

She has published in journals such as Transactions in GIS, the International Journal of GIS and Urban Geography. She also authored and co-authored several book chapters in French.
CLA Teaching Award: Term Faculty

Katie Van Wert

“Finding satisfaction in a story or poem should be hard work,” English Instructor Katie Van Wert says in an essay about her teaching philosophy and practices. “In this sense, learning is not a matter of mastery, but of openness. Selves are like texts: dynamic cultural constructions made of irreconcilable parts. This may be particularly true of young people, whose identities are more than ever in flux. As students learn to confront the ambiguity in texts, they also learn to honor the ambiguity of their own evolving life stories, and to engage productively with forms of difference within and beyond themselves.”

In a letter of support, English Professor Krista Twu describes observing a Women Writers class in which students were leading the day’s discussion: “Katie demonstrated incredible discipline and trust in this system of facilitation by remaining silent throughout the process,” Dr. Twu writes. “It’s rare to see a truly ‘decentered’ classroom, but Katie genuinely put the onus on the student presenting to determine the pace and method of discussion.”

UMD English M.A. graduate Scott Koski writes about taking Dr. Van Wert’s course titled Mapping Post-Colonial Literature. “There are few courses in my undergraduate career I have enjoyed as much,” he says, “and even fewer professors who have sparked my interest in continuing to explore a subject independently after the course has ended.” He also names Dr. Van Wert as a significant influence in helping him get to Ph.D. program at St. John’s University in New York.

“As a difficult student,” says Satya Putumbaka, “I’ve also felt the benefits of Professor Van Wert’s personal attention and guidance, which were necessary for my success in her class, and in this school. Professor Van Wert is one of the best examples of such a teacher that I’ve found in this school.”
“Teaching,” says UMD Writing Studies Department Head and Linguistics Professor Chongwon Park, “is a dialogue. So is research. The two are tightly intertwined. My teaching philosophy revolves around the question of how I can connect my research to my teaching for the benefit of my students. A somewhat unexpected outcome of my effort to bridge the gap between my teaching and research has been the improvement of both.”

Former students Crystal Smith and Kevin Swanberg wrote letters that define Dr. Park as a professor who is unusually, powerfully, and adroitly committed to fostering critical thinking and problem-solving skills, inspiring students to think innovatively, responding to student needs, requiring students to apply knowledge and explain their reasoning behind those applications, and spending generous, thoughtful time with them outside class and even multiple semesters after classes have ended.

“Dr. Park is more than just a professor,” Swanberg says. “He regularly goes above and beyond the typical demands of college-level teaching for his students. I think Dr. Park enjoys seeing his students work through the complicated problems he gives them.”

Journalism Professor John Hatcher says, “Dr. Park’s motivation is driven by an authentic desire to help our university become more responsive to the needs of current and potential students.” He continues, “In his own essay regarding his nomination for this award, Dr. Park concludes by saying he is not sure he is worthy of this award. It is exactly this level of humility that is the foundation of what makes Dr. Park an authentic and good person, motivated by all the best attributes to be a transformative force at UMD.”
CLU TEACHING AWARD: TENURE-TRACK FACULTY
JEANINE SCHROER

“Teaching at UMD,” says Philosophy Professor Jeanine Weekes-Schroer, “has been the most invigorating, rewarding, and demanding challenge of my career. I have had to work to overcome my weaknesses and to advance upon my strengths.” She also works hard to help students, UMD, and her field overcome and advance.

“Philosophy has a serious problem with diversity,” says Dr. Weekes-Schroer, “this, combined with my intellectual interests, pedagogical ideals, and personal values commits me to making UMD’s philosophy curriculum more diverse and more inclusive.” Part of that commitment is developing courses and helping to establish practices that expand the diversity of voices participating in philosophical inquiry at UMD and beyond.

Student Daniel Norgard’s letter of support for Dr. Weekes-Schroer names her skill in guiding conversations that can feel challenging for many students: “In a course about race and racism,” he says, “Professor Weekes-Schroer took subject matter that can often breed discomfort and presented it in such a way that an entire room of undergrads could conduct comfortable and tactful discourse.”

Other letters from former advisees and students remarked on Dr. Weekes-Schroer’s generosity and eagerness outside class time. “As an older, non-traditional student,” Yasmina Antcliff says, “I struggled a lot when I transferred to UMD. Dr. Schroer’s advice and mentoring was an integral part of my success and I ended up graduating summa cum laude. This probably would not have been the case without her mentoring.”

It is clear that Dr. Weekes-Schroer has had a profound influence on the lives of many of her students.
NOTES
Thank you for being part of the 2016 CLA End of the Year Awards Reception. Whether you are here as a faculty or staff member, parent or family member of a student, one of our CLA students, alumni, or donors to one of our scholarships, you are part of our CLA family and we wouldn’t be here today without your support. We look forward to seeing you again next year.
